ARE YOUR WEBSITES READY TO RECEIVE at least ONE BILLION CUSTOMERS?

By Jeff N Marquis and Kerry J Harrison

So many of you tell us daily that your website has been designed in such a way that it is easy to access, easy to understand, and easy to navigate. How many of you are very sure of this? Are you sure that your website can be downloaded easily and efficiently? Are you absolutely sure that almost no one will have difficulty filling out your order forms? Are you also very sure that your information is easy to understand?

We are not going to waste your time by telling you what you should do in order to attract more customers to your website. Nor are we going to give you the magic answer as to how to use those many search engines that constantly promise to bring more traffic to your website. What we are going to tell you is very simple.

For the price of one minute of your time we are going to steer you towards some very hidden, very lucrative, and untapped markets that your competition is not yet aware of. However, the American government knows about these markets and they have started to use their legislative power to ensure that companies accommodate these powerful markets through their websites.

Let us give you some stats to help you understand the magnitude of this situation. As of March 2005 it was estimated that there were about 888 million global Internet users worldwide and by the end of 2005 this number is expected to climb to about one billion users.

In addition, there are some last minute stats that we would like to share with you. As of 2002 about 75% of global teenagers were Internet users but as of June 2005 it is estimated that this stat has climbed to a scorching 90% with males between the ages of 15 and 17 being the heaviest users. The June 2005 stat for adults was estimated to have stood at 66%. This news flash was provided by CNN.

As of 2002 another market consisted of 750 million persons worldwide and 55 million of them were living in the United States.

There is something else that you should know about your 55 million fellow Americans and that is as follows.

For the year 2002 their gross income was one trillion dollars and they spent about 4.3 billion dollars on internet technology. In addition, we were told that 2003 stats revealed that there were about 31 million Americans seeking websites that were written in simple and easy to understand language. More importantly to note is that a rapidly growing number of global users whose first language is not English are also crying out for more and more English oriented websites to be written in easy to understand English.

Now, now, don't start panicking on us here. We are going to give you some free tips to get you started and if you follow our advice you will soon see how it all makes complete sense.

When you design your websites, don't overload them with graphics and images because our ever growing market of wireless surfers will have a lot of difficulty accessing and downloading them. In addition, you will be unable to reach the 750 million customers worldwide and the 55 million Americans because they are unable to deal with graphics and images. This is because they are our special needs market and their special access technology is unable to read graphics or images.

Use simple and easy to understand English so that you can reach the 31 million Americans and the hundreds of millions of global users whose first language is not English that we mentioned before. Remember, that these markets will not be the only ones that you will be reaching if your websites are designed as we have suggested. The entire world will be at your feet!

One final comment: If you follow these guidelines you will also be able to reduce your internal costs and it is also natural that you will increase your revenues and your customer base. If you don't do this soon then the American Government will be penalizing you if you don't.
